THE MISSION of Tennyson Center for Children is to work with every child and family impacted by trauma so they can realize their infinite possibilities.
Dear Tennyson Family,

At some point, many families receive a frightening phone call. They’re told their child is in trouble; there has been a school shooting; their child is having thoughts of suicide. As a parent to five children as well as many foster children, that call makes your heart skip a beat. For some of the parents and caregivers we support, that call is a near daily occurrence, and they live in constant fear and worry about what each day will bring.

At Tennyson, our mission is to address the deep, underlying causes of a child's mental health challenges so they can stop living in crisis. Kids and families come to us each year to begin a process of transformation and healing. That first step is an incredible act of courage and hope, and they deserve to be met with the highest standards of care. In 2022, I continued to chart our own path towards improvement and growth with many notable achievements:

» Our kids in the School & Day Treatment Program are thriving with access to new therapies and approaches that address the mental, physical, and social impacts of trauma. Students can now benefit from recreational, speech and language, animal-assisted, and horticulture therapies.

» We secured a $1 million federal grant to construct a youth residential treatment center on our campus for low-income children with intellectual and developmental disabilities (I/DD) and co-occurring mental or behavioral health challenges. This project is phase one of a larger vision to expand and revitalize Tennyson's campus to support more underserved populations.

» We launched a comprehensive trauma-informed care model to fully realize the widespread impacts of trauma on the developing brain and determine the types of interventions best suited for each person in our care.
We are meeting the rising need for services and supports in our community. We saw a 150% increase in referrals compared to the prior year.

We concluded two major fundraising campaigns (one for Child Abuse Prevention Month in April and Operation Giving in December). We also hosted three fundraising events (The Spring Luncheon, the FORE! Our Kids Golf Classic, and the Mile High Country Q & Brew). I thank each of you who contributed to their success.

We gave kids and families a safe place to turn for care and treatment. We passed annual inspections from the Colorado Department of Human Services and the Office of Behavioral Health, exceeding standards for safety, quality, and compliance.

These accomplishments directly impact children's lives. And they were made possible by the generosity of our extraordinary community. I wish you could be here every day to see the difference you are making, but I hope you enjoy reading about our work in the pages that follow.

Now in our 119th year, Tennyson is excited to build more paths to healing for kids who experience significant adversity. Already, one of the newest kids in our care told his mom that she didn't have to worry about him in school anymore. He was excited to make friends and try all the things his trauma kept him from enjoying in the past.

With Gratitude,

Mindy Watrous,
President & CEO
Community-Based Program
Meeting Kids and Families Where They Are

Tennyson's Community-Based Program brings personalized therapy and support services directly to children's homes, schools, or any other place where they can best work towards healing. Services include:

Intensive In-Home Therapy
This service delivers personalized care and treatment to kids who are experiencing a crisis or mental health emergency. Whether they need individual and family therapy, parenting support, or behavior management, Tennyson improves their wellbeing from the comfort of home. In-home care and telehealth reduces barriers to mental health support and allows clinicians to better address household dynamics.

Intensive In-Home Therapy (BRANCH)
BRANCH stands for Behavior Resources for Adaptive Needs in the Community and Home. It provides intensive in-home therapy for children with autism spectrum disorder and other intellectual/developmental disabilities in addition to trauma. It's unique from other autism services in its focus on trauma and its incorporation of individual and family therapy.

Outpatient Services
This offering serves kids and families with less intensives needs. Oftentimes, it provides ongoing support for children who are ready to “step down” from higher levels of care. Through individual and family therapy, diagnostic services, and care coordination, they continue building upon their progress to address the deeper causes of their mental health and behavioral challenges.

Child First
This service aims to prevent child abuse and neglect by supporting parents with kids 0-5. Child First strengthens the most vulnerable families who encounter poverty, mental health issues, homelessness, and other challenges. It's an evidence-based model that uses Child-Parent Psychotherapy (CPP), focused on growing the attachment between a parent and a young child.

Families Together
Families Together connects families who feel isolated with volunteer "Neighbors" who deliver meals, groceries, or care packages for six months. Neighbors also build a friendship through encouraging letters and phone calls. This added layer of community support helps stabilize families (often a foster or kinship family) and prevents a child from needing more intensive levels of care.

Connect Parent
Connect Parent is a support group that provides evidence-based parenting tools for caregivers with teenagers. Members participate in one session per week for ten weeks.
My son Aris is smart and ambitious, but I worried about his future. After being abused by his stepfather, he was becoming violent and aggressive. When he had a blowup, the only thing I could do was call the police and place him under an Emergency Mental Health Hold. He would be hospitalized for ten days before returning with the same exact behaviors. In fact, his situation kept getting worse as the hospitalizations made him even more isolated and depressed.

I was referred to Tennyson during one of Aris’s hospitalizations. It was the doctor’s fourth time seeing Aris, and he said, “This isn’t working. I’m going to write you a referral to Tennyson. They have many different therapists who practice different kinds of therapy, and I think they can help.”

When we first partnered with Tennyson, my goal was to keep Aris out of hospitals, out of danger, and out of jail. Since then, he’s become a completely different child. He’s able to name what he’s feeling and control his behaviors. The hospitalizations have decreased to the point where they are only triggered by significant, stressful events. Less time in hospitals has allowed him to be there for his little sister. I believe he will carry these coping skills into college and his career so he can be a successful adult who knows how to manage his stress.

Arianna, Tennyson Parent

"There is nowhere else like Tennyson for families looking for help for their teens."

98% of kids who received intensive in-home therapy avoided hospitalization or crisis centers for a mental health emergency.

83% of children in our Outpatient Services demonstrated a decrease in their trauma-related symptoms.

Four kids who had prior interactions with the juvenile justice system reported no incidents in FY22.
When a child has complex trauma, it can spill out into the classroom in the form of behavioral and cognitive issues. Our fully-accredited K-12 school provides a holistic education for kids whose needs are too great for public schools to meet. In addition to academic support, students and their families receive individual, family, and group therapy with certified clinicians. This multi-disciplinary education team provides social, emotional, and behavioral learning to help students return to their neighborhood schools.

ASPEN (Adaptive Skills for People with Emotional Needs) is a service within our school for students with intellectual and/or physical disabilities in addition to trauma. ASPEN classrooms are designed to have consistent routines that create calming environments for the kids and help develop their emotional regulation skills.
Nicholas was referred to us after struggling in his elementary school. He was in a program for kids with autism that failed to meet his individual needs. “I had to leave work every day because they’d put him in what looked like a little jail cell with no windows,” his mother recalls. “One time he smashed his head against the wall until he was bleeding.”

In our classrooms, Nicholas received more intensive and personalized support right away. His mother says his greatest achievement was learning to communicate. “It was traumatic what he had gone through, but he wasn’t able to express himself in full sentences. I used to cry about it. I never thought I’d get to hear what my son is feeling. Then one day in the car he said, ‘I don’t have any friends. No one likes me.’ It was painful to hear, but it was also the first time he showed me what was bothering him.”

Since then, Nicholas has continued to develop meaningful relationships. He dances and sings karaoke with the kids in his class, and he thinks of his teachers as friends. “He has a warmth and a sense of identity now,” his father says. “Tennyson Center gave us our son back.”
Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs) are traumatic events that occur during childhood and adolescence. They can include physical, emotional, and sexual abuse; neglect; and household dysfunction. These experiences can have a profound effect on areas of the brain that control how we cope and interact with our environment. According to Dr. Bruce Perry, "This is why asking 'What happened to you?' is so important in understanding what's going on with you now." The children we serve reported the following experiences at intake:

- 94% Felt Unsupported
- 76% Parents Separated
- 51% Felt Humiliated
- 48% Household Member with a Drug/Alcohol Problem
- 45% Witnessed Domestic Violence
- 39% Injured
- 36% Not Enough to Eat
- 32% Household Member Imprisoned
- 26% Sexually Touched
ALTERNATIVE THERAPIES
Finding Individualized Paths to Healing

When a child has adverse childhood experiences, that memory is stored deep in the brain where it can impact every aspect of their mental and physical health. To treat the widespread effects of trauma, we added these alternative therapies to our list of services in 2022:

Speech & Language Therapy
by Ellen Ratigan, Speech Language Pathologist

Speech and Language Therapy typically targets fluency, articulation, and voice. At Tennyson, I also help to improve children’s social communication skills (like interacting with new people, understanding what's appropriate or inappropriate, or knowing how to express and read other people's emotions).

This service is especially important for the kids we serve because they may not have grown up in a language-rich environment, or they may have learned destructive communication habits if they grew up in an abusive household.

I've already seen kids make great progress, like the student who was finally able to answer a question in class or the child who found the courage to ask her classmates if she could sit with them during lunch.

Horticulture Therapy
by Nick Wininger, Garden Manager

Denver Urban Gardens (DUG) helped us launch a pilot program that uses gardening to improve children's mental and physical health. Plants are therapeutic for kids who need routines and calming environments, such as kids with autism. In the garden, they can explore with their senses without being overstimulated.

For similar reasons, it helps kids who are high-energy or in a state of dysregulation. We want to give teachers and clinicians another tool in their toolkit. We already have high-energy spaces like playgrounds. By adding a lower-energy space, we are giving kids more ways to work through their challenges.

One of the kids here has a special interest in bugs, and he's excited to help release ladybugs in the Spring!
Continued

Animal-Assisted Therapy (AAT)

Exposure to animals can be a powerful tool for reducing stress and anxiety, practicing social skills, building confidence, and learning emotional regulation. Kids in our School & Day Treatment program now have access to two forms of AAT. They can receive weekly equine therapy with horses at Mustard Seed Ranch or interact with a variety of therapy animals at the Community Farm owned by Intricate Roots. Two clinicians and their dogs also became certified to offer AAT to families in their homes.

Recreational Therapy
by Jennifer Link, Recreational Therapist

Recreational Therapy uses games and activities to work towards specific goals. It's about finding the activities that bring someone joy or adapting activities so they can participate. It's especially important for Tennyson kids who may not be able to participate in activities they once loved because of a traumatic event. Even the simplest activities can be triggering for children with trauma, but recreational therapy helps them feel safe and accomplished.

At the end of a session, I ask kids to reflect on the things they did well. It's important for kids to recognize that even if a game didn't go as they hoped or planned, there are positive things to come out of each attempt.

Recently, I used basketball to improve a child's breath control, which was limiting his speech. With each dribble, we took a breath. For free throws, we would inhale, exhale, and then shoot. It showed the power of recreational therapy—using the things we love to achieve difficult goals.

190 People who donated consecutively for 10 or more years
Every year, students from Regis Jesuit High School volunteer in a Tennyson classroom for two weeks. It’s a longstanding tradition that provides soon-to-be graduates with transformational learning opportunities. By the end of their service, the Regis students become valuable teacher aids and role models for the younger kids.

Shortly after starting at Tennyson, I began working with a six-year-old boy. He had a history of traumatic events including severe neglect in several foster care placements. He was adopted around the age of two by parents of a different race. The family has since had two more children. As I began working with the child and his family, it became clear that he struggled with low self-esteem and has internalized a narrative of being unwanted, unlovable, and a 'bad guy.' He frequently compares himself to his siblings and peers—especially if they are meeting developmental milestones quicker than he is. So far, I have watched this child make great strides in his ability to communicate and discuss negative emotions with the adults in his life. He's started to challenge the negative narratives that he believed about himself."

—Rachel, Tennyson Clinician
